Some people heading to a child-custody hearing might think of dressing conservatively. Not Pamela Anderson, who breezed into Los Angeles County Superior Court last week turning heads in a casually cool pastel sundress. "For her," points out L.A. stylist Brenda Cooper, "this is presentable. She's not wearing ripped-up jeans down to her bikini line and a T-shirt up to her nipples." Not only that, says Cooper, "she doesn't have that mask of makeup on, a major move on her part." The defense rests.
